Hongkong, January 22nd, 1875.

Our respected and respectable London contemporary, the Daily News, has lately indulged in an examination—a rather cursory one, probably-of a Blue book containing the report of Her Majesty's Consuls at the various ports of China, and has arisen therefrom profoundly impressed with the belief that impending ruin menaces the Indian Government, consequent on the increased opium production in the Celestial Empire. This staid organ of Liberalism has not hitherto been wont to appear in the character of an alarmist, and doubtless honestly believes the matter is as serious as it makes out. The writer of the article is evidently about as well informed on Eastern questions as most English journalists, and that is saying very little for him as an authority. He is aware, "that the returns of our opium traderemain 'magnificent,' and that there is at present no marked diminution in the demand." But he seems to be totally unaware that there is really, on the whole, a "marked" increase in the import of Indian opium to China. The total to all Chinese ports for 1873 shows Andre, Kirby, Blakeman, Hoywood, A. I an increase of 4,787 piculs over the import of the preceding year. But our contempo--rary-considers the Marquis-of-Salisbuly ought to pender very carefully over some auotations given from the Consuls' reports. Sinclair, from Foochow, reports a falling off in the consumption of Patna, and finds the cause in the increased production of Chinese And thereat the Daily News takes affright. This terrible diminution, however, in reality is represented by 612 piculs. We and the accounts be adopted. may add, for our contemporary's edification that the returns of the opium imports for 1873 at Chefoo also show a decline with those of 1872 of 725 piculs. At Canton there is likewise a decrease for 1873 of 125 piculs. But at Newchwang, Tientsin, Hankow, Kinkiang, Chin- they could adopt the report and accounts, and kiang, Shanghai, Ningpo, Amoy, Swatow

MEMORIAL. Wong Ohin Foo, a Ohinese polical refugee, anch a one as we might expect from a bighly educated and cultivated Chinaman, and as such was extremely interesting.

The five great requisites of a devout follower of Confucius are gravity, propriety, sincerity; virtue, and filial love, and the speaker considered each one of these separately. With regard to gravity, he said that every Chinaman is expected young man's face must indicate wisdom and discretion beyond his years. One of the great of respectable parents, whether boys or girls, are in the streets of a city in China running about so that every one may see and criticise her. Neither do young girls go out to work in factories to carn their living; they are supported, male members of their families. The sexes, too. beyond the family, are kept a partstrictly. "and." said the speaker, "they still find opportunities so seldom that they make the every best use of them." There are many social laws of this kind, and it is on account of their violation that the Chinese have a prejudice against forsignaries are so pranceessful in China. The Jesuits, on the contrary, succeed ten times better than any others, because they full into the habits of the people, comply with their laws and thus gain their respect and love, and are better able to perform the work which they attempt. With Protestant missionaries it is very lowest classes, among the coolies who are least capable of understanding. Having done this, the Chinese of the higher and respectable classes regard them as part of the dregs, refuse to have anything to do with them, and thus. they lose all chance of securing influence among the better classes. "It is on account of theconcluding this part of his discourse, "that we

Extracts. TO THE BARQUE OF ST. PETER. (After Horace, Odes I., 14.)

Saint Peter's Barque! on "sea of troubles" drifting, Say, whither art thou borne? To harhour? Or to toss on currents shifting A dereliet forlorn?

Bethink thee of thy bulwarks strained and creaking Before the Northern blast; Thy tattered rigging and the timbers leaking; Thy bent and breaking mast, Thy holdfasts scarce keep dock and keel together; Gone are thy sails; ay, gone The sainted figures whom, in scowling weather, Thou oft hast called upon.

What boots it that from Apostolic forest Thy parent plank was hown? Its strength, when with the elements thou warrest, Before their breath is strewn! Small-trust, showever gaudy-gilt the vessel, However fair her form.

The pilot puts in her when brought to wrestle With the descending storm. Love loyaller than mine thou rarely vanutest; And, therefore, ill at ease I watch thee drift into unequal contest With those grim Teuton seas.

SHAKSPEARIAN CRITICISM.

What is the cause of the superiority our own country ? Before we answer the question we must distinctly know what is meant by criticism? In Shakspeare's case there are two kinds, the philosophical and the without any reserve, that in philosophical criticism we have no one to set against Ulrici or Gervinus. But in the purely philological criticism the case is different. We have men like Abbott, Fleav, Furnival, and Skeat, not to mention others, who can hold their own against all comers. But the curious point is walk can be made to include all sorts of mans to reap all the honours in the field of Shakspearian criticism. One of the causes for this is the great dificulty in England in head to look at it. The same thing if he finding any publisher who is willing to unwants a glass of water; he won't stretch out dertake the publication of any Shakspearian work. It does not answer from the publisher's point of view. The late Mr. Dyce used to say that unless he had possessed means of his own he could never have published his edition of Shakspeare. The late Mr. Staunton. than whom a finer verbal critic never existed, used to complain bitterly that he could not find a publisher for his notes on Shakspeare upon which he had spent so many years of toil. Halliwell'a edition was published by subscription, and is a sealed book to the multitude. In Germany the case is different. > THE LAKE OF GENNESARETH, AND TIBERIAS.

The road from Nazareth to Tiberias leads over the low ridge which bounds the valley on the north-west, across a broken table-land and through the village of Kenna, regarded by geographers as the traditional site of Cana in Galilee. Scfurich, the ancient Seppart in the heroic but unsuccessful resistance of the Jews to the Romans under Titus, and the summit of the steep descent which leads down to Tiberias, a thousand feet below us The clear, blue, placid waters lie in a deeplydepressed basin nearly seven hundred feet below the level of the sea. Some geologists have supposed it to be the crater of an extinct volcano. More careful investigation, however, proves that this is a mistake. It is but a part of that long line of depression which, starting from the sea level near the Lake that on spending a night here he was literally covered with them, and plucked them from his coat by handfuls. EXERCISE FOR CHILDREN Slow walking is of but little use to any one as a sanitary measure; it should be quick and laisk. Such large numbers of the children of our towns appear to be almost shut up to walking as the only out-of-door exercise that they can take, that it is one by no means to be despised, but rather to be made the most of : and where, as in the country, a we do not hold our own. We allow the Ger- games-leaping, running, climbing, and so forth-nothing could be better. But still for a large majority of English boys and girls, the usual tame "constitutional" is not enough. It does not afford a sufficiently wide outlet for the boiling over of their fun and vitality; neither does it equally exercise and develop all the muscles of their frame, those of the arms, back, chest and abdomen being left almost inactive. To ensure these two essentials we must give them games and sport, out of which, if rightly directed, double the enjoyment and double the hard word is to be got. Even the boisterous merriment and noise of these pursuits is good for them physically.
